Ceiridwen Terrill specializes in literary nonfiction, including environmental journalism, science writing and memoir, with a focus on urban ecology, urban/wild conflicts and the intersections of gender, culture and science. Her work has appeared in Isotope: A Journal of Literary Nature and Science Writing, Oxford American and the anthology, What Wildness is This: Women Write about the Southwest. Her book Unnatural Landscapes: Tracking Invasive Species was published by the University of Arizona Press. She teaches writing at Concordia University in Portland and is working on a book about wolfdogs in the United States. An avid backpacker, kayaker, and sailor, she lives on her sailboat Whistledown with her dog Thelma.
